

TYPOGRAPHY

Your headline got bigger. The page still feels flat.

Squint at your product page. If nothing jumps out, size was never the problem.

THE MYTH

MYTH

If it matters, make it bigger.

So the H1 grows. Then the subhead grows to keep up. Then the price. Now the whole page is loud and nothing leads.

Loud is not the same as clear. Swipe for what is actually going on.

REALITY

Hierarchy is a ranking. Not a size.

Six things set at 32px is not six levels. It is one level, printed six times.

A ranking needs a number one. Most product pages never pick one.

28%

is the most of a page people actually read.

Nielsen Norman Group, on an average visit. Nobody is reading your page. They are hunting for the one thing that wins.

So give them one. One winner per screen, and a job for every level under it.

THE SYSTEM

Six levels. Six jobs.

1	Page promise	the outcome
2	Section signpost	where am I
3	Block claim	why this part
4	Body	the proof
5	Action	the button
6	Fine print	the risk

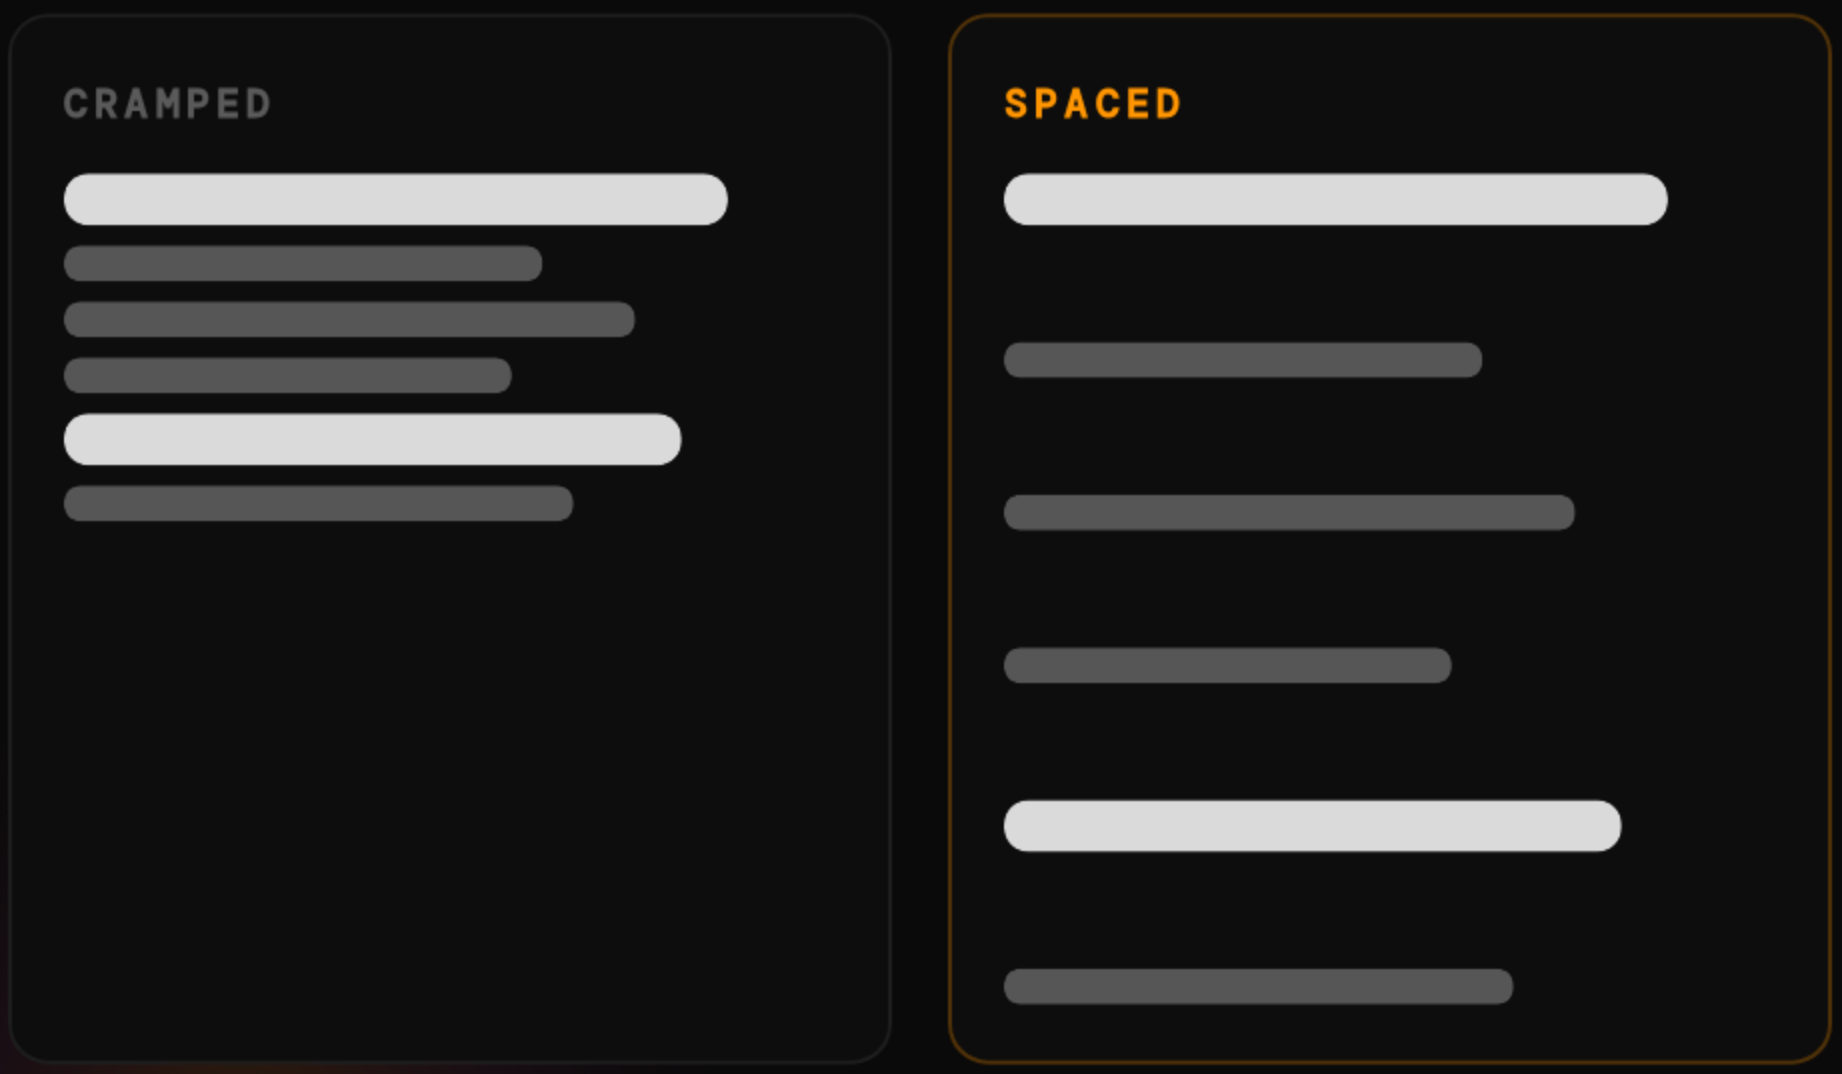

If a level has no job, it is not a level. Delete it.

THE MISSING LEVEL

Two of your six levels are pure space.

Same type sizes on both sides. Only the gaps changed.

Nothing got bigger. Things stopped touching.

Which level is your page missing?
